Hello, everybody! Because we have been busy with projects, we haven't been able to do a regular video for some time, but we love Q&As, so we decided to release another one in the meantime. Our plan is also to eventually make videos where I, Wes, appear with my face on the videos, but the laptop camera is so poor that it's unacceptable. I don't even look like me. When finances permit, we will buy better equipment. Until then, we'll proceed as usual.

QUESTION 1: I have been seeing a slew of 2019 prediction videos on YouTube since the New Year began. Of course, many of these videos feature predictions made by the most famous prediction master of all time, Nostradamus. What are your thoughts on these predictions or any others that have been made? What is your opinion on Nostradamus? Is this a way for the AIF to put people into fear mode?

ANSWER: These famous people, who have predicted our future, have often been guided in one way or another. It might have been in dream state, in direct contact with astral beings, or they have channeled the material. These predictions usually were handed down to them from someone inside the Matrix. In other words, the Overlords are usually behind it. On rare occasions, we can assume that someone was in connection with their Higher Self and got some clues from there. This means there is an agenda behind it, often unbeknownst to the prophet. The Alien Invader Force (AIF) wants us to stay on a certain path, and the more people tuning into the prophecies, and believing them, the more likely they will come true in one way or another—with assistance from the AIF.

There are an infinite number of potential life paths that humanity can take. Some people refer to these as timelines. We are constantly moving back and forth among these potential lines or paths, both collectively and individually, depending on the choices we make. When we make small choices, we do not affect the deviation from the current probable timeline or “future” too much, and a predicted outcome can generally be assumed. When we make big choices that have a greater impact on the path we are following, we shift to one of the probable paths which has a less predictable outcome. There are those who can “see” the closest probable timelines and make predictions based on that, but they are not set in stone, not by a long shot. Back to Nostradamus. He MAY have been one of these people. Think of it as trying to forecast and predict where a major hurricane is going to make landfall. The farther away the storm is, the more difficult it is to determine the precise path. The closer it gets, the greater the chance of knowing exactly where it will hit. Yes, a lot of prophecies and predictions are nothing more than fear programming for a multitude of differing agendas, but not ALL of them are sponsored by the AIF. Humans do a lot to each other without any help from the AIF. However, if we look at a lot of prophecies of ancient civilizations, we can see that their prophecy did not come from personal insight or investigation. Rather, it was given to them by an unearthly being (either in real physical contact, dreams, or meditation type communication).

QUESTION 2: What are your thoughts on divination tools such as Feng Shui, Tarot cards, I Ching, Runes, pendulums, etc.?

ANSWER: We feel that all these things are beneficial when learned and practiced with a knowledge of how energy works and how we can use it to create effects in our own personal reality/environment. Tarot cards and pendulums are nothing more than using a tool that allows you to connect to that part of yourself that exists which is not bound by this matrix; your Higher Self. The source of the information you are getting is really YOU. That is why the Tarot reader’s deck will ONLY work for them. Everyone can do this without the use of tools, but some people find the tools reassuring because they do not trust the answers they get when they simply ask themselves the questions. They feel the tools confirm a “real” connection to something bigger, and so their confidence is at a level where it allows for a pure, uncontaminated conduit of knowledge and access to the Universal knowledge. Some people have a stronger connection to their Higher Self and can do amazing work with these tools. We know of a few and have witnessed it. We have witnessed how confidence improves this ability substantially. When we doubt ourselves and the information we receive, it is less likely to give us the results we desire.

People also feel less personal responsibility for their own decisions if they can assign that burden to something they perceive as being separate from themselves. For example: I asked my Higher Self for the answer and I told my Higher Self to give me a sign; "Make my eyes blink once for yes and twice for no." My eyes blinked once, therefore the answer must be yes. I take no accountability for making that decision because my Higher Self told me what to do. Well, who blinked your eyes? YOU did. The answers ALWAYS come from you. It's the same as asking the Universe for a sign. You will get a sign because you will begin to start looking for a sign. Your perception will make a "sign" out of a song, a number, a color, etc. Ultimately, when you do this, you are really just waiting on yourself to give yourself permission to make a decision.

QUESTION 3: There is a popular saying by Socrates..."Know thyself" Do you have an understanding of the deep meaning of that statement? [Also], the singularity is fast approaching...Can you give us a break down of events/technological breakthroughs going forward and then when the Alarm should start blaring for those who are willing to not take part?

ANSWER: "Know thyself" is a philosophical concept that can have as many meanings as individuals who ponder the concept. It means whatever you determine it to mean for your benefit. Yes, we have an understanding of what it means to us, but that may not be a correct meaning for you because your perspective and experiences are different from ours.

From a philosophical standpoint, we can't extensively understand the world around us, the Matrix, or the true cosmos (the KHAA) if we don't understand ourselves. We need to go inwards and learn, in our minds, to separate ourselves from our environment and other people—we need to find the unique “me.” Only from that perspective can we be able to truly see. It’s a gradual process, however. Some might object and say we’re not separated—we are all ONE. That would be true in its ultimate state, but we are not here to become ONE—we are separate units of consciousness (souls), having individual experiences, and that’s by design. But we can learn much more about ourselves by learning more about ourselves.

The alarm regarding the Singularity has already gone off. We are in the middle of it already with all the technology that’s been released. If we look around, we see how addicted people are to technology. The Singularity is not yet finalized, but we need to be very careful already now, so we don’t fall into that trap. People of today are less and less in the 3D world—they have most of their consciousness already invested in technology, and it’s going to become worse. There are things we need to think about, and we highly suggest that people read Article 4 and 5 on Wes’ blog at wespenrepublications.home.blog for more information on that.

QUESTION 4: Since we live in a simulation reality, how can it help to ground ourselves before meditation, or anytime? And the trees out there, what does it help to go sit by one's trunk if they too are part of this simulation? And the sea, waves, crystals? Are we doing Enki a favor by meditating? Who made our very original souls?

ANSWER: If we don’t stay grounded, we are more receptive to outside influences from the astral. The body should be grounded to Earth as much as possible—it then becomes a shield of protection. Walking barefoot, when possible, is one of the best grounding methods. You can also visualize a cord going down from your feet below the Earth and anchor itself there. Then imagine golden energy from this cord coming up from the Earth, going through the cord, and surround the entire you. Then let the energy go back into the ground, all the way to the anchor, so you get a circuit.

Our bodies are our vehicles in this simulation, and our vehicles are part of nature, even if it's a simulation. So is the sea, and so are crystals. We live in a programmed reality, and everything is interwoven. Therefore, you will become calmer when you're close to water because your body is almost entirely made of water, and being in nature lifts our mood. Crystals work because they are receptive to energies.

We are extensions of the Queen, who is our Spirit. She created us from Her own Spirit, which means that She is us and we are Her.

QUESTION 5: Will it not be impossible to reincarnate after the singularity? because if no one dies anymore there is no souls to recycle? And there is just a single "robot massconsciousness". Those who don't die before 2045, will they just enter the eternal singularity? Do we have to commit suicide if we are young now and possibly will not die of old age before the singularity? (and after that it's impossible to die). So, it's just some 20 years to make it through the grid? And we must be so careful not to have nano-[tech] entering our bodies if we go through medical treatment? Because then we will lose the chance to die and leave through the grid?

ANSWER: The plan the Overlords have is that we do not need to reincarnate once the Singularity is in place. We become one with our nano-technology based bodies, and we can't just leave them. Our consciousness will be contained in collective form within a "Super-Cloud," where we all are connected telepathically. It's the AIF's version of showing us that "we are all ONE."

You don't need to die before 2045 in order to be able to exit through the Grid. All you need to do is to make sure you don't agree to having your body-parts "upgraded" with nano-technology, and to avoid the Smart Cities. So long as your body is still biological, you will even have an easier way in the future to exit because the Grid will probably be obsolete, and the AIF might take it down.

What we suggest is this: if you are having major surgery, ask if any necessary transplants include nano-technology, and if so, request it's done the "old way," if possible. If you are having smaller surgeries, the risks are also smaller that this should stop you from exiting when your body expires. It's when you come to the point where your body is cyborgic that there is great danger. That's when you get stuck in your body. Also, be careful with blood transfusions. Make sure to ask if the transfusion includes nanobots or other nano-technology—in the transfused blood, in this example. If it does, and they refuse to change procedures, or say they can't do it any other way, I would personally refuse the transfusion, even if it would mean death to my body. But that's anyone's personal decision.

QUESTION 6: What's your take on free will vs destiny? I used to believe in free will a lot more until I realized that everything that we do, say, and think comes from our belief, value and attitude systems. These systems are shaped from the way we were raised, our family, what generation we grew up in, our race, our location, our friends, media, TV programs, commercials, education systems, religion, medications/drugs we take, zodiac signs, information we read and life experiences that we go through. The choices we make are determined by these belief systems. So YES, we always have a choice in life, but our choices are determined by our belief, value, and attitude systems which are shaped by situations we have NO CONTROL over. I think about this one a lot, I want us to have free will but the evidence suggests that we don't. I feel that the Kybalion had a good explanation with the law of correspondence, but I'm wondering what your thought process on it is?

ANSWER: First, here is the difference between destiny and fate: “Destiny has much more positive connotations than fate. While it also refers to the idea of predetermined events, destiny is something we can actively shape and alter. Unlike fate, there is an element of choice in destiny.” Yes, our lives ARE predestined, but despite the AIF agenda on deciding our destiny, we still have free will to change our own destiny—both as individuals and as a soul group. However, this is becoming more difficult because of our amnesia and non-beneficial belief systems. We have much greater chances to override our destiny, the more awake and knowledgeable we become—we then have more choices and can see more short and long-term outcomes. So, we believe you more or less answered your own questions. We agree with your conclusions.

You say that you do not have freewill because the choices we make are determined by belief systems. Are you forced to have these beliefs? Are you forced to take the medications you take and watch the television? Are you forbidden from choosing your own friends or educating yourself independently? Are you forced to adopt and adhere to a religious organization? Are you allowed to read what you want? Yes, we must live within a system of law and conduct within this matrix, but if one person can overcome these perceived obstacles then EVERYONE has the potential to overcome them. You always have a choice. You always retain your freewill. ALWAYS.

As for the Law of Correspondence, we have referred to this in many ways since beginning this YouTube channel. Correspondence between the planes just means that there is a relationship between all things. What is outside is also inside. What is external is also represented internally. When we realized this fundamental aspect of creation, we were able to get a lot of answers to questions by knowing that if something exists in “this” form, it must also exist in “that” form. When we went searching, using this a starting point, we often found our answers. All things are expressed in all planes or realms of existence. To put it simply, there is a form of YOU that exists in all realms of existence from the highest vibration to the lowest, simultaneously. All these aspects of you make your entire being and they are neither separate and existing elsewhere while you live this life, nor are they waiting for you to ascend or evolve and catch up to merge back with them. Your VERY Highest Self is just as much a part of you as the nose on your face, right now at this moment. We just have amnesia and a limited reality that is confined, for the most part, to our five senses and the visible light spectrum.

If you can wrap your mind around this, know that you are created from the Universe and so you ARE the Universe. In its most expanded perspective, this is the Law of Correspondence, in our opinion.

QUESTION 7: When everyone is in their own kind of universe, their own timeline... and everything they see, and everyone they meet, is somehow also THEMSELVES, attracted by THEMSELVES - Does something like an authentic and 100% objective TRUTH even exist? Because when everyone creates their own life and experiences, based on what she/he believes in (consciously or not)... Is it even possible, that there exists a TRUTH, which exists all above that - no matter of what you think?

ANSWER: What a great question! YES. Authentic truth does exist. It is the quest for authentic truth that starts us on the path of spiritual awakening. It is a process to undertake rather than a goal to achieve. In a Universe of unlimited potential, the quest for truth only ends when we decide we no longer want to participate and we surrender our soul back to where it came from (if that is even a possible choice, we don't know). Otherwise, there is NO being in the Universe who knows EVERYTHING. There is no one sitting at the top of a hierarchal pyramid saying they have all the answers for everything. The expansion of our Universe and the reason this Universe is one of creation is for exactly the opposite intention. It is because the Divine Feminine/God/Source wanted to learn more about Herself that the process of creation was inspired and set into motion, literally. If the Source of all already knew everything there was to know, we would not be here—there would be no need. In fact, nothing would exist at all because everything would already be known. We get more and more authentic truth, the more progress we make as spiritual beings. Anyone who would come to you and tell you that they know the absolute TRUTH is someone to be wary of.

QUESTION 8: Do you also see that the "spiritual path" is a very great attraction for narcissists?

ANSWER: Definitely. Very often, it's within the spiritual movement many people who are codependent (targets for current and previous narcissists) end up. The honest truth-seeker is often a codependent or a codependent going through healing. They know something is wrong and that there must be more to reality than just pain and suffering, so they start searching. These individuals are often highly emphatic, and the genuine seeker is often loving and compassionate towards others. This is a buffet for narcissist—lots of energy to feed from and vampirize on.

QUESTION 9: In your very old videos when you talked about narcissism and you said that we should not love everyone, and especially narcissistic people, and yet recently you said that loving someone as evil as Marduk is an act of higher spiritual understanding. I am confused; should we or should we not show love to narcissistic people?

ANSWER: Thank you for asking this question as it gives us an opportunity to expand on this topic. When we “love” someone, we tend to have relationships with those people, in which we open ourselves up to the other person. We give them our emotions, willingly and generously. We express our happiness, our sadness, our anger, our fear, and our sympathy and support. We should be very careful with those people whom we choose to have relationships with. Unless you know you can trust that the other person is not manipulating your emotions to suit their own needs, keep them at a distance and out of reach to your personal energy (emotions). We can still have a position of compassion for someone and understand their plight without pulling them in close and giving ourselves to them. We can try to understand why someone does evil and see it from their perspective, but we do not have to enter their sphere of existence to do this. When we raise ourselves up, we can see it more clearly from a higher perspective. In fact, it is often when we are at their level that we cannot understand the motivations or actions of another. We must create distance in order to do that. It is our empathy that allows us to do that. Not by giving our empathy to the other, but by using this ability to put yourself above the problem and say, “Boy, he must be really angry about what happened to him! I understand how that would make him react the way he does!” It is understanding without becoming emotionally involved. Does this make the distinction clearer? If not, just say so and we will continue to discuss it. This is an important topic.

QUESTION 10: ...Sometimes I feel like I am going to wake up from this current dream-reality state. But when this happens, I get very afraid. It is the fear of the unknown. This gives me a panic attack. I quickly have to find something that will make me hold onto this reality. I know it is attachments to this place that makes it hard, but I also want to wake up without the fear of what will happen to me next. I never had OBEs. I sometimes have lucid dreams, where I experience being in the astral body. It seems natural in the dream state but scary when it's not a dream. How do I wake up without being afraid, and if I wake up, will I be able to come back to my body?

ANSWER: You share this with a lot of people, who feel the same. The fear of death is the strongest implant we have—put there by the Overlords. Having a 360-degree change in the perspective of reality is also a kind of death—we leave our old ways of living behind us and start a new life. It can be very scary.

Therefore, we need to break these barriers—fear is always what is holding us back—always. We need to overcome as much fear as possible. One thing to do is to continue researching to the point where it becomes obvious that death and major changes are not necessarily something bad. If we look at this very soberly, we are actually dead right now, and when we leave our bodies, we start living. Everything is inverted—death is life and life is death. Death is nothing to fear—particularly not now, when we know where to go. We might be anxious about what is waiting on the other side of the Grid, but once we get there, we will not have all the fears you have now. The “artificial soul” that contains almost all these fears will be shed in the process. When you have lucid dreams, you ARE out of your body, and as you wrote, it feels natural—more natural than being IN a body.

You will never have a problem coming back to your body, regardless whether you have a lucid dream or an Out of Body Experience (OBE). You are connected via a “silver cord” to your body that can't be broken until you die. Like experienced OBE masters say, “if you're having an OBE and want to go back to your body, all you need to do is to THINK about the body, and you're back.” Hopes this helps.

QUESTION 11: If Enki is castrated and is put under the spell/cursed by Enlil, then how and why do you say that Enki is addicted to sex?

ANSWER: He can no longer have sex or procreate, but he is still addicted to having sex with human bodies. It was not En.ki in a human body who was castrated, it happened in his KHAA body and, as I understand it, him as an avatar was also affected by this, which is where the curse comes into play. That doesn't take away his drive, however.

QUESTION 12: Is it possible for one to resist the snares of Enki or Thoth after having made a 'blood over intent' kind of pact?

ANSWER: Yes, because whatever ritual you might have gone through, you can cancel. When we sign "contracts" like that, they are given to us to sign with an intention to deceive. That is not something that is taken lightly upon in Orion. Just cancel the contract in your mind and void it, and continue disagreeing with virtually everything in this Matrix, because nothing, and I mean nothing, of what we've been told and have learned is true.

QUESTION 13: Is the Brahma Vaivarta Purana just a construct of this matrix or do similar cycles exist in the KHAA? Will there be a Golden Age (Enki-Atlantis period?) following the current Kali Yuga? Can we even know what date this might occur since the Romans established the dating system?

ANSWER: Yes, it's a construct within this Matrix. The Golden Age and the Brahma Viavarta Purana are centered around Krishna, who in fact was En.ki incarnated, based around En.ki's "Heaven." Then, on the opposite side of the coin, we have Marduk, who is pulling humanity in the opposite direction towards the Singularity and the Machine Kingdom. Whomever we follow on these opposite paths, we'll lose. The only solution is to exit through the Grid.
