Video 45: Between Lives Area and Soul Patching Part 1 of 2 (WARNING: Not for the faint-hearted!) (Transcript) Written by Wes Penre, July 16, 2018

What we are now going to tell you can be disturbing to people, but both Ariel and I feel that time is right, and it needs to be said. If we keep it to ourselves, we do everybody else a huge disfavor, and it would be irresponsible of us NOT to share it. I have known about this information for a few years, but I didn't include it in the Wes Penre Papers (WPP) because of the nature of the information. It was shocking to me then, so I presumed it would be shocking for the readers, as well. Therefore, I decided to wait with releasing it until the time is right. Now, when Ariel and I look at what we have built up in our videos up to this point, we have decided that now IS the time.

In Video 43, we explained that the soul is not the highest self and that the soul/avatar is composed of trillions of small bioelectrical fires. This means that the soul as we know it is made of energy, which can be transformed into something else per the laws of physics. The only thing that's static, i.e. not made up of energy, is the Divine Feminine Herself (we strongly suggest watching BOTH Video 42 and Video 43 before this one, if you haven't already). Now, we want to expand on this in a manner that for many might be shocking and change the paradigm almost 180 degrees. This information has never seen the light of day on this planet before, as far as we know, but it's been hinted at in other places, and we'll put a link in the Description box once again to Brett Stuart's video about the Between Lives Area (BLA), which was remote viewed by several skilled remote viewers (RV'ers.) Mind you that the remote viewed information came out recently, and the following is something I, Wes, have been aware of for a few years. Now, when some of it is already in the open, thanks to Brett, we see this as a good time to reveal some more.

In the WPP, I wrote that there are weapons, sometimes used by ET forces, battling in the KHAA, capable of splitting the entire avatar into pieces, so all the fire fragments are scattered all over without having the capacity to regroup into a soul/avatar again. The result is that this soul will go back to being ONE with the Universe again, and thus, lose its individuality. We now suggest that the Overlords are in possession of this kind of technology, and they are using it on us after each completed lifetime.

In previous videos, where we explained our hypothesis what a narcissist consists of, we suggested that when we die, we are stripped of our wounded soul fragments, which are then stored by the Overlords, so they can take these emotionally wounded fragments from different human souls and patch them together into a new soul, resulting in that this new being consisting merely of clustered soul fragments from many different souls. Thus, there is no "core being" to begin with when such a fire fragment composite incarnates on Earth—this is how a narcissist is created in the BLA, according to our hypothesis. All there is are different split and wounded parts that make up this kind of "soul"—there is no analytical "thinking unit." Then, what is left of the original human soul, after being stripped of her fragments, is what will be recycled into a new body again. This way, we always incarnate as a "whole" soul—all in one piece, without any fragmented clusters. However, there is something additional to this that we did NOT mention at the time...

***

First, let's back up a little bit. You—the soul/avatar, born into your current body, came here in "one piece," and you were born with amnesia. Subsequently, depending on the character of your birth family, your environment, and your ability to cope with your challenges, determines what your personality will become in this particular lifetime—at least in part, because we also have to take the ancestral line into consideration—something that also greatly affects us. Some situations in life you might have handled well and analytically, while other incidents, where you were physically or emotionally wounded, have been buried in your subconscious mind, and they became unavailable to you, as we've discussed in our videos about narcissism. With these wounds triggered, you probably REacted rather than acted. These wounds became your fragmented self, from having dissociated from the trauma. This goes for every single human being on this planet—no one is emotionally unharmed and intact after having been here for a while.

***

What is left, besides the fragmentation, is your conscious mind that can think logically and which can act analytically, without just reacting to past trauma. It's your conscious self, and this is what you might call the soul. It's basically the part of you that you call "I" or the "Ego;" this becomes your "identity" in this specific lifetime—with emphasis on THIS lifetime. Whoever you become and whatever Ego you will possess is based on the circumstances in your life, how you've handled them, and what decisions and choices you've made. In other words, what you consider being you is the conscious mind in THIS lifetime, in THIS body, and the conscious mind is necessary to have, in order to make sound decisions and to function and survive in this harsh reality, contrary to a narc, who would be totally dependent upon others for his or her survival, feeding off people's emotions, as we've explained in earlier videos.

***

In other words, there is no "You." What you consider being your Ego/Self is just a composite of different fires from different souls, and you develop your mind, which you consider being you, in each particular lifetime, and you are never the same person from life to life. The only "I" is the Divine Feminine/Source.

***

Now, when we've discussed what the soul is, let's take a look at what happens every time we die from this world. We perceive ourselves going into the astral realms, and most of us see a tunnel with a bright white light on the other end. We are energetically drawn to this tunnel, unless we resist and direct our energies elsewhere. Once on the other side of this tunnel, we are in the BLA, i.e. the AIF Recycling Center.

Some things are already known about the BLA from regression therapy (e.g. see Dr. Michael Newton's work), channeled material, such as the Pleiadians, and from people who have had Near Death Experiences (NDEs). I wrote an extensive paper about this, as well, in the WPP, Level 1. First, we have a life review—often together with our spirit guide or guides. The discarnate soul only remembers her previous lifetime, and that's for a reason we will soon get to. Second, we usually meet with dead relatives and friends, and then it's time to stand before the Council, go over our previous life and evaluate it, and to set goals for the next lifetime. This is such common ground and told by so many people that we can look at it as evidence that this is what generally happens. Then, when the soul has "rested" and is ready to go back and fulfill their "karma," which the soul has been manipulated into accepting by spirit guides and the Council, it's time to go back to a new life on Earth. The BLA is, we've learned, mainly located on Mars, but not in the same density as our own, obviously.

The next step, after been prepared for the return to Earth, is to go through another metaphysical tunnel, which is "bent" in a way that it's pointing back towards Earth. This procedure is relatively fast, and while traveling through this tunnel, the AIF is using soul-extracting weapons on us. This weapon or machine is being used to split the entire soul into a trillion pieces—the soul that was you in your previous incarnation. It's the same principle they sometimes use in cosmic warfare. However, they don't let all these fires dissolve to becoming pure universal energy again; instead they collect all these fires, but keep them separated from each other. Then, they take fires from different other discarnate souls, possibly at random, patch them all together, and from there they create a brand new soul, which is no longer you but someone totally new. The new "You" becomes "whole" again, but you now consist of fires from many different souls that are unrelated to you the way you knew yourself from your last incarnation. Consequently, the fires from your previous life will be places in other souls. Your current You will thus exist in many, many multiple souls simultaneously, once your fires have been patched together into many new souls. Then, the AIF, with help from more technology, shoot you down into a body at random—you have no choice in the matter. This happens after each and every lifetime. It is highly likely that it's this soulscattering technique that gives us amnesia.

The entire BLA is mainly a big show. Karma does not apply to a discarnate soul because she will be scattered all over and used to energize many other souls patched together, so no so-called karma can basically be resolved in the next or any other lifetime. Most of the Afterlife procedures seem to be executed because the Overlords need our consent to send us back here into a new body. Via manipulation, we eventually agree to go back—many souls don't want to come back. This is also why some souls seem to stay in the BLA to "rest" for what they perceive 100 years or more, while others go back to Earth fairly quickly—the AIF can't force us to go back—they can only send us back by manipulating us into giving our consent. If this wasn't the case, they could just recycle us without any additional procedures.

***

What are the implications of all this? Let us pretend that you developed into a very spiritual being in this lifetime—you might have read the WPP, listened to our videos, and done massive research elsewhere, so you know what it's all about. On top of that, you have practiced what you've learned. However, instead of exiting through the Grid when you die, you decide to come back into a new body and continue your work, educating and helping your fellow human, until we all make it. This is a wonderful and very compassionate thought from a highly spiritually aware being, but is it possible? According to what we discussed above, the chance that this is going to happen is VERY small. Let us elaborate further on this, so we can explain what we've concluded.

***

There is a reason why the AIF doesn't care if people on this planet wake up spiritually. To them, it could even be a good thing because that means more energy to them. After all, when these spiritually aware humans enter the BLA, they are being dissolved and patched together into a completely new soul anyway—a soul who has little awareness left—if any—of the achievements she accomplished in the last lifetime. Next time, this previously aware soul might be born in a poor Third World country, constantly struggling just to stay alive and survive the first years of their life. Or, this same soul might become a criminal, or a person who doesn't even believe they have or are a soul. It's not even correct to use this example because it's not the same soul that is being recycled into the next incarnation—what was you in the previous life is now part of perhaps a million other souls, with a few fires in each of these souls, who will all begin a new journey here, now having to start from scratch. Thus, after each lifetime, we lose our personality, individuality, or Ego—whatever we want to call it.

***

This creates enormous conflicts in each incarnated soul because each soul composite now has memories from all these other fires they are composed of, and each of these fires has their own soul memory that has nothing to do with the other fires. Thus, reincarnation the way we humans have understood it is false. We do reincarnate, but not as the same soul as in the previous incarnation—we are a totally new being. This is why people have déjà vu experiences, memories of past lives, and conflicting personalities. Because a soul clearly remembers being Napoleon in a previous life doesn't mean that the whole soul was Napoleon—only one or a few fires of the trillion other fires inside them were part of the Napoleon soul. This also explains why there are so many people thinking they are Napoleon, walking around on this planet. Regression therapy into past lives thus becomes obsolete. Whose memories are being addressed? They are definitely not the soul memories of the entire soul.
