Hello, this is Wes Penre. Here is another video to ponder. How much of what we humans are thinking and doing is predestined, and how much do we, as a soul group, use freewill in our thoughts and actions? This is an interesting question, so let's discuss and elaborate.

By the way, this video is not part of the video series we are currently working on, but an independent release.

We, Ariel and Wes, have previously discussed that we humans have an overlay of soul splinters from many different traumatized souls when we incarnate here on Earth—an overlay that has been added by the Overlords with the purpose to easier control us and lead us in the direction they want. Our dedicated listeners are now well aware of this. However, if we dig deeper, how does this affect us as souled beings in our daily life?

Some of you might have heard of the following before, but many might not. Ingersoll Lockwood was a political writer, novelist and lawyer, living in the 19th Century. His first two fictional novels were called, "The Travels and Adventures of Little Baron Trump and His Wonderful Dog Bulgar" and "Baron Trump's Marvelous Underground Journey." His final novel, published in 1896, was titled, "The Last President." As you notice, Lockwood used the same name as that of President Donald Trump's youngest son, Baron! In the novels, Baron is directed on his adventures by a "master of all masters," whose name is...Don (as in Donald Trump).

As if this is not enough, in Lockwood's last novel, "The Last President," there are clear references to our current president, and I quote from Newsweek:

"The story begins with a scene from a panicked New York City in early November, describing a 'state of uproar' after the election of an enormously opposed outsider candidate." ""The Fifth Avenue Hotel will be the first to feel the fury of the mob," the novel continues, citing an address in New York City where Trump Tower now stands. ‘Would the troops be in time to save it?’” “The president’s hometown of New York City is fearing the collapse of the republic in this book ... immediately following the transition of presidential power. Some Americans begin forming a resistance, protesting what was seen as a corrupt and unethical election process.”

Is all this purely coincidental? How could Lockwood see into the future? Or could he really? What is going on here?

Well, that’s not all of it. Sometime in 1958, an episode of the TV series, “Trackdown,” was released, featuring a snake oil salesman named Trump, who promised to build a wall in order to prevent the end of the world! Only he could prevent the end of the world, and he managed to manipulate and fool all the gullible townspeople before he was exposed. He told the inhabitants that the only way to prevent a doomsday event was to build a wall and for each person to always wear an umbrella when they went outside. Sure enough, all of them were convinced that Trump was right, and all of them wore umbrellas to avoid getting hit by meteorites. In the end, Trump is exposed as a fraud.

Again, what a coincidence! Many people have made the above connections, and it’s even been mentioned in mainstream news how eerie these “predictions” are. How is all this related? Some people even suggest that the presidential Trump family are in possession of a time machine. However, we think the answer is simpler than that.

Scientists often tell us that there is no such thing as freewill and that everything is predestined and that there is no Godly Design to this universe. People in the spiritual field of course think this is ridiculous, but what if the scientists are correct to some extent? Not that there isn’t a Divine Design, but maybe things in this matrix are predestined to a large degree—particularly when it comes to the human soul group.

Think about it.

Why does the majority of the world population not want to wake up and investigate things and learn more about themselves? Why are they not on a spiritual path? We are back to the overlay—the artificial soul. This overlay can have many purposes, but what if one of the main purposes is to keep us predestined, preventing us from using our freewill in most cases? After all, the artificial soul is a purely stimulus-response—action-reaction mechanism. There is nothing genuine with the artificial soul/reactive mind.

How many thoughts people have are truly their own? Most people believe that what they say and think comes genuinely from them, and that they are the ones who create them. The same goes for how they act and react. But is this actually true?

Perhaps take a day or two just to observe people and pay attention to how they think and interact. Doesn't it seem as if they are just using thought patterns that have been duplicated by thousands of people before them, and doesn't it seem as if they react to these thoughts and communications in a predictable way? It looks like the reactions are, more or less, the same reactions we, as a soul group, repeatedly have had to the same kind of stimuli. We humans are just parroting each other—there is no authenticity in that. People act and respond in a way that is predictable, thinking they are “supposed to.” Even most of those who rebel are doing so in a reactive manner, so nothing is really gained.

If we further elaborate on this, what does it mean? If the above is in fact true, this means that an estimate of perhaps 90-95% of the world population live their entire life without having a genuine thought, or if they do, very few of these thoughts are their own. The genuine soul is there, but it is asleep. There is almost no connection whatsoever to their core being and their Higher Self—their Spirit.

Let's dig deeper. If this is true, how much of our individual lives and the lives of all the people on the planet is predestined, and how much is genuinely freewill? Wouldn't it be a piece of cake for the Overlords to predict the future? If they have long-term plans, spanning over many millennia and they want to accomplish them, wouldn't it be easy to manipulate a population that is operating on a stimulus-response level to make most of us head in the direction they want? Isn't that what they're doing via politics, through education, by making laws, and by making us work for the System, etc.? Everybody is just staying in the fold without questioning any possible agenda behind this—they just respond as they are supposed to.

Isn't this the reason why most people, when you try to wake them up, resist us with all their might—even calling us names? Is that the genuine soul responding, or is it the reactive mind/artificial soul?

How many people are having soul level experiences on this planet, , and how many are acting with unconscious response?

Waking up is a gradual process. When we call it “waking up spiritually,” it is a literal wakeup—it’s not just an idiom. The more we learn, the more holes we punch into our “Inner Grid;” something that also affects the “Outer Grid.” Our true soul that’s been buried under layers of artificial soul fragments starts peeking out, seeing the sky for the first time in many millennia. We then begin researching and investigating, questioning and pondering. The closer we come to seeing things as they really are, the clearer the connection to our core soul and our Spirit. Suddenly, we find ourselves connecting dots just by looking inward—the more we progress, the less we need outside stimuli to figure things out. Instead, the communication now becomes more direct between mind, soul and Spirit. And the more we wake up, the more difficult it becomes to interact with the world around us, from which we can’t get a conscious response. However, once awake, we can’t go back to sleep again—once on the path of awakening, there is fortunately no return.

The more conscious we become, the higher our souls vibrate, elevating us to a higher density or sub-density. This means that instead of looking at things with tunnel vision, we can now observe from a broader perspective—we can view things from a bird’s-eye perspective. This is what densities, the way we use the term in the spiritual community, means. Once we reach a new density or sub-density, we start pulling in things that are on the same vibrational frequency, corresponding to the new density.

In other words, we are not using freewill until we wake up and start being conscious again, and time will continue repeating itself in cycles, recapping the same routines and patterns, although there are small differences each time around because during each loop, there are some people who wake up and consciously make changes that alter the timeline. Thus, we still have a spiritual evolution within the Matrix, and there is still freewill, according to the Overlords, although the evolution is thousands of times slower than it would be without their manipulation and the existence of the artificial soul overlay. However, when everything is said and done, we highly doubt that the manipulators will get away with this.

The only reason why En.ki and the Overlords have an advantage before us is because they operate from a higher density and can see things from this so-called bird's-eye view. Thus, they will have the upper-hand, until each individual wakes up and starts to consciously do some thinking and acting instead of just reacting. Remember, however, that it's a gradual process, with a lot of work involved, but it's highly necessary.

So, let's end where we began. Wouldn't it be easy for the Overlords to program people such as Lockwood to write novels like these? After all, the Overlords need to tell us what they are planning.

The human soul group live their lives in time-loops; we repeat the same cycles and patterns over and over. Then we reach a certain destination, an event happens, an old cycle ends, and a new begins—it is quite predictable. However, within each cycle, there is a minority of souls who wake up, use their freewill, and change the outcome a little bit, but these souls are then being “harvested” at the end of each cycle by the Overlords. Thus, humanity evolves, slowly but surely, during each loop, but the ones who made changes to the time loop are now taken out of the game through the Harvest, and new souls need to do the job during the next loop. The only difference this time around is that we have been presented with a solution for those who have awakened enough—we are now able to leave this Matrix!
